WHAT'S NEXT FOR SCIENCE

WHAT'S NEXT FOR SCIENCE

AGU is the world's largest association for Earth and space scientists. Our audience is made up of a global community of more than half a million people who gather and share research, build policy coalitions, advocate for diversity and inclusion in the sciences, and catalyze discoveries for climate solutions.

Science has always been about the new. The now. The next. It's what propels us, feeding our questions and inspiring our work. The constant question and answer form a rhythm, a cadence, a story. Science is a story. A story of infinite possibilities. A story of continuous discoveries. A story of hopeful solutions.

It's the story of our journey; we create what's next. What's next for our community. What's next for discoveries. What's next for our planet. What's Next for Science.

Each year, AGU's annual meeting, the largest gathering of Earth and space scientists, convenes 25,000+ attendees from 100+ countries to share research and connect with friends and colleagues. Scientists, educators, policymakers, journalists and communicators attend AGU24 to better understand our planet and environment, opening pathways to discovery, opening greater awareness to address climate change, opening greater collaborations to lead to solutions and opening the fields and professions of science to a whole new age of justice equity, diversity, inclusion and belonging.

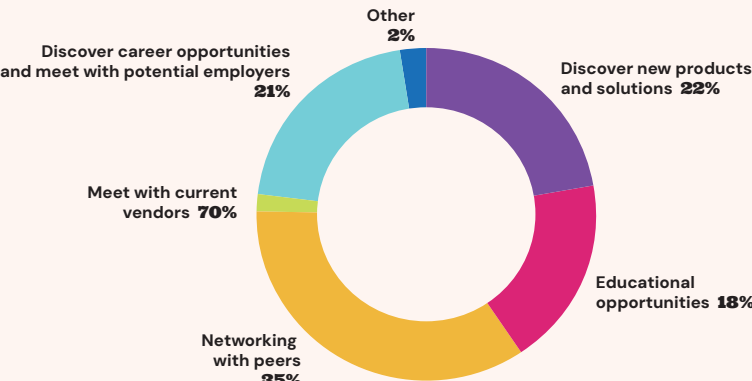

This December, AGU24 returns to Washington, D.C. with the theme "What's Next for Science."
